

The pleasure and pain of caring for a family member with dementia

Don't miss Prof Nancy Pachana in conversation with Prof Sara Honn Qualls (US)

Providing care to a loved one with dementia can offer unique challenges and rewards. Professor Qualls will offer valuable perspective on this life altering experience. She is an expert in helping whole families, across generations, understand the impact of dementia and help the person living with dementia to achieve high quality of life. She offers a keen understanding of the ways technology and community services can support caregiving.

If your family is navigating these issues, this session will provide a supportive forum to have your queries answered. Professor Nancy Pachana, UQ's clinical geropsychologist, will facilitate questions and will also be available to offer advice stemming from 20 years of experience consulting within the Australian aged care system.

Professor Sara Honn Qualls, Ph.D., APBB, Kraemer Family Professor of Ageing Studies, Professor of Psychology University of Colorado, and Director of the UCCS Gerontology Center, has published several books on clinical geropsychology. She works collaboratively with colleagues and community partners on technology projects funded by the National Institute on Aging (US), to foster health and well-being in older adults and brings her expert perspective to Australia this July.

Professor Nancy Pachana, Ph. D., FAPS, FASSA, is a clinical geropsychologist, neuropsychologist, UQ School of Psychology professor, and co-director of research body the UQ Ageing Mind Initiative. She is internationally renowned in the area of geriatric mental health, particularly late-life anxiety disorders, and is widely published.
